Definition

“Bribery” means property or other benefits given to a person to induce that person to act or refrain from acting in their official capacity, whether or not such act is lawful, as desired by the payer of the bribe. This includes the acceptance of gifts, tokens of goodwill, donations, entertainment, and similar benefits when offered, given, or received in a way that can be reasonably considered a bribe, and includes giving or receiving gifts after the fact. (Acting in the performance of duty differs from receiving in a morally acceptable manner, which refers to accepting property or other benefits that can be calculated in monetary terms from individuals given on special occasions, festivals, or important days. Therefore, accepting gifts, tokens, or gratuities in the performance of duty may be considered bribery.)

“Performing in the performance of duty” means the actions or performance of duties by a government official in a position appointed or assigned to perform a specific duty, or to act as a substitute in a specific duty, both generally and specifically, as a police officer whose authority and duties are defined by law, or as actions taken in accordance with the authority and duties specified by law for police officers.

“Commanding officer” means a person who has the authority and duty to order, supervise, monitor, and inspect police officers under their command.

Measures for Protecting Complainants/Informants/Witnesses and Maintaining Confidentiality

1. Consideration of Complaints: The level of confidentiality and protection of those involved shall be determined according to the Regulations on Maintaining Official Secrecy B.E. 2544 (2001). When referring matters to the relevant agency for consideration, the informant and the complainant may suffer hardship. For example, complaints alleging the accusation of a government official shall initially be considered official confidentiality. Anonymous complaints shall only be considered if they provide clear evidence, circumstantial evidence, and specific witnesses. Reports of influential individuals must conceal the name and address of the complainant. If the name and address of the complainant are not concealed, the relevant agency must be notified and provide protection as follows: "The superior officer shall use their discretion to order appropriate protection for the complainant, witnesses, and individuals providing information in the investigation, so that they do not suffer any harm or injustice that may arise from the complaint, testimony, or information provision." If the accused is identified, both the complainant and the accused must be protected. Because the matter has not yet undergone a fact-finding process and may constitute malicious accusations causing distress and damage, and if the complainant specifies in the complaint that they do not wish to have their name concealed or disclosed, the agency must not disclose the complainant's name to the respondent's agency, as the complainant may suffer harm as a result of the complaint.

When reporting information about influential persons, the name and address of the complainant must be concealed. If the name and address of the complainant are not concealed, the relevant agency must be informed and provide protection to the complainant as follows: "The superior officer shall use their discretion to order appropriate measures to protect the complainant, witnesses, and individuals providing information in the investigation from harm or injustice that may arise from the complaint, testimony, or provision of information." If the name of the accused is specified, both the complainant and the accused must be protected, as the matter has not yet undergone a fact-finding process and may constitute malicious accusations causing distress and damage, and if the complainant specifies in the complaint that they do not wish to have their name concealed or disclosed, the agency must not disclose the complainant's name to the respondent's agency, as the complainant may suffer harm as a result of the complaint.

2. When a complaint is filed, the complainant and witnesses will not be subjected to any actions that affect their work or life. 1. If any action is necessary, such as separating workplaces to prevent the complainant, witness, and accused from meeting, consent must be obtained from both the complainant and the witness.

3. Requests from the victim, complainant, or witness, such as requests to change workplaces or methods to prevent or resolve problems, should be considered by the appropriate person or agency responsible.

4. Protect complainants from harassment.
